Halloween and the Law

Halloween Tradition

The origin of Halloween dates back to Samhain, a Celtic celebration. Samhain (pronounced sow-in), represented the last day of summer and the start of a cold and dark winter. November 1 was also the start of the new year for the Celts. It was believed that the night before the new year the lines between the living and the dead disappeared, allowing the ghosts of the dead to return. To celebrate, the Celts built bonfires and adorned costumes. Once the Roman Empire conquered the Celts, Halloween evolved again. The Romans celebrated two festivals in late October, Feralia and Pomona. The symbol of Pomona is the apple, which may be how the tradition of bobbing for apples was born. Centuries later, Pope Boniface IV dedicated the Pantheon in Rome to all the martyrs, bringing about All Souls' Day, also called All-Hallows Eve and eventually, Halloween. Centuries later, between 1920 and 1950, Halloween evolved into the holiday it is today, with trick or treating, parties, costumes and decorations.

According to the National Retail Federation, Americans will spend an estimated $6.9 billion on Halloween, making Halloween the country's second largest commercial holiday.

Given its rise in popularity over the years, it's not surprising that Halloween found its way into the legal industry.

Halloween and the Law

There are several law blogs that have written Halloween-themed posts and addressed some of the trendier ghouls, like zombies. Thelegalgeeks.com is a blog written by two attorneys focusing on, "all things Geek." Last year, the blog addressed the legal ramifications of Jack Skellington's actions while trying to kidnap Santa Claus in Tim Burton's A Nightmare Before Christmas. Their analysis can be read here:

For those that enjoy the television show The Walking Dead, wired.com featured an article in which both attorneys and psychiatrists address some of the legal issues in the show. Questions posed included "Do the Undead Have Legal Responsibilities?" and "How Does a Zombie Apocalypse Affect Moral Reasoning?" The article can be read here:

Thelawandthemultiverse.com is yet another off the wall legal blog written by two attorneys. Every Halloween, they take a break from their usual posts about comic book heroes and celebrate Halloween with a seasonal post. For those interested, last year's story concerning the Simpsons can be found here:

Spotlight on the Supremes

On October 31, 2005, a light bulb exploded during Supreme Court arguments. The following exchange took place:

Justice ANTONIN SCALIA Light bulb went out.

Justice ROBERTS: It's a trick they play on new chief justices all the time.

Justice SCALIA: Happy Halloween.

Justice GINSBURG: That's the idea.

Justice ROBERTS: Take your time.

Justice SCALIA: We're even more in the dark now
