History of Texas Veterans Court

The American Legion explains Veterans Court in the following manner: "In Veterans Treatment Court, those who served in our nation's Armed Forces go through the treatment court process with their fellow veterans and are connected to the federal, state and local services that are uniquely designed for the distinct needs that arise from military service." (www.texvet.org)

Veterans Courts in Texas were created during the 81st Legislature in 2009 as Chapter 617 of the Texas Health and Safety Code. Chapter 617 sets the parameters and duties for establishing the eligibility of veterans to participate in the program. According to www.justiceforvets.org, Veterans Treatment Court offers a unique and structured method to which veterans respond well, while being supported by fellow veterans the entire time. Among the most important reasons for the creation of Veterans Court are first and foremost the veterans-only docket, which means the judge assigned is familiar with the common struggles of veterans which may include substance abuse or post-traumatic stress disorder. The judge has a strong and disciplined team in place to assist the veteran which gives the judge the opportunity to use discretion and effectively respond to each veteran that appears. Secondly, each veteran experiences camaraderie with others that have served through the use of veteran mentors. Lastly, these courts are a "one-stop shop" by helping veterans get assistance from all the benefits and resources to which the veteran is entitled. It is not uncommon for a Veterans Court to work with Veteran's Health Administration, Veteran Benefits Administration, Veterans Service Organization, State Departments of Veteran Affairs, and veteran mentors.

North Texas Veterans Court

Collin County started its veteran court program in 2012 and its mission is, "To serve the veteran by providing exceptional assistance, guidance and representation in the application process of VA and state benefits for which they are eligible, advocating for the veteran and their dependents." A full list of the services provided by Collin County Veterans Court is available on the Collin County website.

On September 16, 2016, the Rockwall County Courthouse hosted a dedication ceremony that celebrated Texas' first region-wide initiative: The North Texas Regional Veterans Court. Collin County's own Judge John Roach, Jr. recognized the need for a Regional Veterans Court to serve five additional counties. This initiative expands the program to the following counties: Collin, Rockwall, Kaufman, Fannin, and Grayson. Judge Roach stated, "We couldn't let a veteran, because of a geographic line, not have a Veterans Court." A link to the full article is available here.

In addition to the websites previously mentioned, there are a number of resources available to those who would like to learn more about Veterans Court. The State Bar of Texas published an article explaining Texas Veterans Court. There is also a public service announcement featuring the West Wing cast that provides information about getting involved and how to donate. It is available for viewing here. Thank you to all who have served our country!

Did You Know?

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals was established in 1891 so this year marks its 125th anniversary. On September 22, 2016, the Court was convened to celebrate this milestone. According to the Court's website, the Texas Legislature passed Senate Joint Resolution No. 16 calling for amendments to the Texas Constitution to include, among other things, the creation of a court to be known as the "Court of Criminal Appeals," which would have "appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of the State in all criminal cases of whatever grade." The State Bar of Texas states that "in fiscal year 2015, the CCA received 4,520 criminal appeals, seven of which were for death penalty cases, and 4,698 habeas corpus petitions, 50 of which were for death penalty cases." Here is a link to the full article on the state bar website.

The Curt B. Henderson Law Library is proud to offer both WestlawNext and Lexis Advance to patrons. Here are some tips to get started with LexisNexis. This section will cover the basics of searching and as always, the library staff is happy to provide brief guidance as well. Here is a look at the homepage with the search box and option to change the area(s) searched:

Searches (search bar circled in black) can be conducted using natural language, terms and connectors, citations, partial or full source titles, and popular case names or statutes. The Explore Content (circled in red) tab can be expanded if the user has a particular area (i.e. Cases) he or she would like searched. Explore Content navigates by content areas, jurisdiction or practice area and specific sources.

For those comfortable enough, the advanced search function is also available on the home page. Advanced search allows the user to enter search terms into the various fields and click on the “Add” button. The “Add” button displays the query in the red search box.
