For the past several months, Officer King has worked to coordinate a consultation with the Karyn Purvis Institute of Child Psychology, Texas Christian University, in order to help the juvenile probation department incorporate a new service model for TBRI (Trauma-Based Relation Intervention). This model is evidence-based and will help to department yield better outcomes for kids in the detention center and kids on community-supervision. As the department seeks to leverage this resource to help foster a comprehensive system change across the entire county, Officer King has lead the coordination of setting meetings with other county stakeholders including members of the Collin County judiciary outside of juvenile, adult probation administration, local law enforcement personnel, and others in order to work toward a comprehensive system-wide change which will yield better outcomes for the entire county. The first meeting was conducted on June 3, 2019 and extremely productive. Good Job Officer King!
